Overview of the program

For property owners who would like to learn how to develop a backyard habitat for wildlife. The Oakland Conservation District is a locally-led organization of state government with guidance from the USDA.

The Oakland Conservation District has a variety of resources to aid local property owners in developing their backyard habitat.

To understand the best backyard habitat one needs to have knowledge of their property's soil. From this one can then identify the plants that will enable the proper habitat for the wildlife you want in your back yard. You may find by attending this program there is other wildlife you would like to attract to your backyard. Once your plan is approved by the Oakland Conservation District, you will receive a sign promoting your successful certification.
